“Library Resources to support Research and Academic Activities in Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering”

By

Nancy Schiller,
Engineering Librarian
University at Buffalo

Abstract

This seminar will focus on examining the resources available from the University at Buffalo libraries to support research and academic activities in the Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering department. Specific emphasis will be placed on discussing availability and usage of electronic and information-technology related resources for mechanical and aerospace engineering research, including electronic handbooks, research databases, digital dissertations, electronic journals, cited author searching, patents, technical reports, and standards. Time permitting, an overview of End Note, a software tool for bibliographic reference management will also be presented.
